

*Washington Park and the James Street Commons
Historic District Neighborhood*

On view in The Newark Museum of Art's Ballantine House

Visitors to The Newark Museum of Art can discover the story of revival and the recommitment to one of America's oldest cities. They can learn about the history of "Washington Park and the James Street Commons Historic District Neighborhood" from the perspective of the properties and people who lived in this neighborhood—both in the past and through the eyes of current residents.

This exhibition consists of a multi-media presentation in the Ballantine House Orientation Gallery as well as historical information panels.
